FAMILY TROUBLES CAUSED SENSATIONAL KIDNAPPING

Boys Found in Pittsburg at Central Police Station and Are Recovered by the Mother.

A sensational kidnapping escapade took place on Donner avenue last Sunday afternoon as the result of domestic trouble between man and wife. A few months ago George H. Dale and wife of Seventh avenue got into an altercation which resulted in an ultimate separation and the bringing of an action for divorce by the alleged wrongly used and much abused domesticated member of the household.

Mr. and Mrs. Dale decided that the misunderstandings were ripening into hatred for each other so they decided to dissolve the matrimonial bonds and each go on their way rejoicing. The couple have been married eleven years and three bright little children have entered the home and these were the apparent obstacles in the way of the separation. As it was naturally agreed, according to Mrs. Dale, that she should have the two youngest, a boy and a girl, and Mr. Dale should take the oldest boy whose age is eight years, until the court would make a ruling as to who would make the best custodian for the offspring.

Mrs. Dale alleges that she was assaulted by her husband before leaving her home and mis treated, so she took the two children and removed to a flat at the corner of Donner avenue and First street, and established a home and sought to earn her own living. She employed an attorney and has applied for divorce.

Last Sunday afternoon, so the story goes, while Mrs. Dale was in the house and the two children out playing on the street the husband went to the place kidnapped both children and started up the street. They both protested and began screaming and crying in a frantic manner until the neighbors for several squares became excited and ran to see what the trouble was. In the scuffle the little girl was let go, and ran back to the house, but the boy was taken away and Mr. Dale it is alleged took both boys and left town and nothing more was heard of either he or the children until yesterday afternoon when the two boys were located in Pittsburg at the Central police station. As soon as the mother learned where they were she boarded a train and went to Pittsburg and brought them home.

The oldest boy says they were taken by their father to Allegheny, but that they watched a chance to escape and got on a street car and went to Pittsburg but got lost and could not find their way home. A policeman came across the little fellows wandering around and they told him where they lived and he took them to Central station and telephoned Chief Woolsey who notified Mrs. Dale.

The mother was glad to get control of her children once more and is going to put up a tremendous fight for a separation from her husband. A commissioner has been appointed by the court and testimony will be taken next week at the office of A. M. Weyant on Donner Ave., who is attorney for the plaintiff.

REPLY FROM McMAHON BORO

The Following Communication Was Sent to This Office for Publication and is Self Explanatory.

Monessen, Pa., Sept. 20, 1906.
Daily Independent:—

According to the "News" of the 18 inst McMahon Boro Board of Health is at fault for all the diphtheria opidemic. First, Monessen pays the secretary of the board of health a good round salary, which if I had the same salary, I could and would guard each house having the diphtheria. Second, there has not been, all told, more than thirty different persons who had diphtheria in McMahon Boro since its incorporation, when they say there have been twenty-five to thirty cases at one time. Third, the first case heard of was reported from Motheral avenue and not McMahon Boro.

Fourth, the first case of diphtheria that was reported to the Board of Health of McMahon Boro, was contracted on Sunday and was reported by a Monessen doctor on the following Saturday evening and I have the card to show the same to be true. Fifth, it is true a foreigner took his child to a Monessen doctor to have its eyes treated on Friday last and the doctor prescribed for it. It is also true the child was taken back to the same doctor on Saturday and the parents were told the child had the diphtheria. So far as the druggist is concerned, I know nothing about, but is that any fault of McMahon Board of Health, in my own defense?

When the first case was reported to me I went to Bro. A. L. Garner and borrowed cards to put up on the houses, posted them promptly and as soon as I could I had cards printed and have promptly quarrantined every case that was reported to me, although I know of a case that a prominent doctor has in McMahon Boro that he has not reported to me, yet the patient is almost well.

In regard to salary all I get is a very black look from most of the people that I quarrantine, but some are very respectful and want their cards put up.

TAYLOR OSBORNE,
Health Officer,
McMahon Boro.

P. S. This is in answer to the "News" of the 18 inst with love for all and malice toward none.

TWO BROTHERS SETTLED TROUBLES IN LOCAL COURT

John and George Popp of Rostraver Township Had Misunderstanding Over Father's Estate.

A little farm of about forty acres located about three miles out of Monessen has been the means of stirring up a bitter enmity between two brothers and apparently the end is not yet. The parties concerned are John and George Popp, two of the direct heirs of John Popp, deceased.

John Popp brought an action of assumpsit against his brother George, to recover rent for the farm since his father's death to the amount of $203.75. The case was tried before Squire Shuster yesterday afternoon, Alex Eicher appearing for the plaintiff and Squire Roley of Belle Vernon, was spokesman for the defendant.

As soon as the attorney for the plaintiff opened the case, Squire Roley asked for a non suit on the grounds that no statement of claim had been filed with the court and that the defense had nothing upon which a rebuttal could be placed. This appeal was overruled and the testimony was taken. John Popp, the prosecutor was then sworn and testified that he purchased the farm from his father's estate for the approximate sum of $3,000 and that his brother George was in full possession of the premises, but would not pay the rental and as a result the action was brought to recover the amount.

George Popp, the defendant was then sworn and offered his reason for refusing to pay the rent. He claimed that he had no reason to recognize his brother as the owner of the property and that there were two other heirs who have equal interests in the place. He said he was custodian of his father until he died June 16, 1904 and was to have $5.00 a week for keeping him which was never paid.

The question of title was then discussed and Squire Roley again asked for a non suit until the records could be examined and the ownership determined. This was overruled and several witnesses sworn who testified to the approximate value of the land and what would be a fair rental. The several witnesses seemed to agree that $125 a year was a fair estimate.

Both attorneys made strong pleas for their respective clients and the case was brought to a close. Squire Shuster reserved his decision until Saturday morning at 9 o'clock.

WEBSTER NOTES

The constant steady hewing
Fells, in time the largest trees;
The constant Webster wooer
Carries patches on his knees;
The constant, careful diver
Finds the rarest, choicest pearl
And the constant, love-sick chappie
Wins the most indifferent girl.

Rumor has it that Wedding Bells will be ringing in Webster within the next few days.

Architect J. A. Lohman of Monessen was down yesterday looking after the new Vogel building.

A neat coat of new paint envelopes the local depot. Station Agent Snyder is greatly tickled over the job.

S. Barnum and Co.'s store was burglarized Saturday night a week ago. Nothing of value was taken, although the thieves helped themselves freely to editables.

Foxes are said to be raiding the henroosts in the vicinity. Still if the colored "gemmon" assert that the foxes are treading over their territory, they might get in and do a little "razzah wok" on the beasties.

About twenty-five guests were present at the Pierce home last evening, the occasion being a 500 part in honor of Mrs. Pierce's house guest. A most enjoyable time was spent. A dantily appointed luncheon was the feature of the evening.

For the benefit of the Webster youths it might be well to say that with the opening of the oyster season, he who takes his girl out for lunch after the theatre is obliged to carry at least six bits more in his pocket than he would under ordinary occasions.

A woman named Legg who does not live a hundred miles from this place is complaining bitterly about exorbitant charges she was compelled to pay at one of the beach resorts. She should recollect that Legg-pulling is one of the chief characteristics at all resorts.

BETTER YOUNG MEN NEEDED

Sherman Becker, mayor of Milwaukee and an earnest advocate of millitant citizenship is making a plea for better young men. He particularly appeals to the idle rich young man, the so-called non-producer, and argues that for all such there is a broad field of usefulness; that it is within the power of the rich young man to do his country and immediate community as great a service as the man who tolls in the field or labors in the shop; that productive effort is not confined to material things, but the man who is doing his little to promote the moral upbuilding of the nation is entitled to equal consideration as a producer.

The rich idle young man with proper training, has a great opportunity in all of the honorable professions — the church, medicine, the law, the newspaper office, literature, art. All that is necessary is that he identify himself actively with any of these and he will be a producer and will be a workman in every sense that the word implies.

In the political life of the country there is a further field for usefullness. The nation, the state, the city needs intelligent young men to help guide us in the right direction. In this line of endeavor the rich young man has it within his power to be of especial service. As Mayor Becker points out, he is not handicapped with poverty, and therefore, tempted to be a grafter in office. His ambition is not to make money, but to make a name for himself and the very fact of being financially independent must prove a tremendous advantage to a public official who is imbued with the principle of right conduct.

Young Thaw, the murderer, is the type of the idle, rich young man who has no aspirations other than to have a good time and waste his life in riotous living. There are hundreds of Thaws throughout the country and it is to all such devotees of idlensss that Milwaukee's young and brilliant mayor issues a call to action. What a power for good young Thaw might have been had his mind been set on lofty ideals and had his latent energy been directed to higher things.

Love Is Enough

By O. R. PHELPS

Copyright, 1906, by C. H. Sutcliffe

"Shut your eyes tight while I tell you a story," Alwyn commanded. "It begins as stories ought always to begin, 'Once upon a time'"—

"Dear me! I know I shan't like it. Those 'once upon a time' things have grown to be such a bore!" Lolita murmured plaintively, but without in the least checking the story teller.

He ran on, his eyes fixed high above her head, "A foolish fellow, foolisher than the common, set himself to hate wisdom, whose other name is woman"—

"He got his come-uppance, of course. They always do in stories, never out of them," Lolita interjected dispassionately.

This time Alwyn laughed. "Whose other name is woman—woman," he repeated with all the emphasis of capitals. "But you're dead wrong. He got no come-uppance. It was rather his ill luck to come down very hard—so hard he groveled in the dust when one particular woman looked him over without seeing him. That has happened, let me see, about three times a day for full six weeks. Result"—

"One hundred and twenty-six grovels, if your figures can be trusted. I doubt it. I doubt, indeed, if there is anything trustworthy about you," Lolita flashed at him, with a smile so coyly engaging it took all the sting from her speech. "Suppose you stop being tiresome," she went on. "I don't ask you to be sensible, I'm so far from sensible myself. But let's get away from the eternal me. There must be such lots of things better worth while."

"What will you have? Shall I discourse on 'ships and shoes and sealing wax and cabbages and kings?'" Alwyn asked, his voice submissive enough, but dancing rebellion in his eyes.

Lolita smiled demurely. "I think," she said, with an air of grave reflection, "if you don't mind, I had rather hear things about Gordon Fleming."

"There's nothing I can tell you—he's so openly, so offensively, so disgustingly rich—and so patiently in love with you," Alwyn burst out.

Lolita gave him a sidewise look. "Are you sure?" she murmured. "Don't you see it would be cruel to experiment with my credulity?"

"As cruel as your experiments with my affection?" Alwyn flung back at her, trying to speak tragically, but laughing in spite of himself. What a rogue she was to play with him so. She loved him almost as he loved her. It had been instantaneous—they had hardly more than looked at each other when eye spoke to eye, heart to heart. But she had flouted him daintily all along, thereby making him more than ever captive. And he in turn had teased and vexed her, now with exaggerated and open devotion, now with reproofs for wholly imaginary faults. Really he did not think she could own a fault—she seemed to him perfect and altogether lovely. But in spite of his overcoming, he had wit enough to see that tame and abject devotion would never suit her—he must show himself a man of spirit and temper else he would be no man for her.

It was ten days since they had come together at the Glenwold house party, ten blissful days of Lolita and love. Incidentally there had been walks, rides, drives, golfing and moonlit maunderings. Mrs. Arklow, Glenwood's chatelaine, had looked on in smiling approval. Lolita had but a scant fortune, and Alwyn, though not overrich, was clearly at the beginning of a great career. Were not the Flemings, father and son, behind him, the Flemings who had millions in hand and the potentiality of other millions in their mere approval? Gordon Fleming, the son, was well in the middle age; he had married very early—as had his father before him—but it had turned out very badly. In a year there had been a separation, later the threat of divorce, but fate stepped in to save the family pride. The wife sailed away on a ship that went down at sea. She had not been heard of in the fifteen years since, so it was safely assumed that she was among the lost. None of the few survivors had any knowledge of her; she was, moreover, so slight and frail she could hardly have lived through the terror.

Morally and legally her husband was free—to love, to woo, to marry, if he chose. So far he had not chosen. Indeed, until Lolita came in his way women had been to him as shadows—shadows which must be well and tenderly used, but given no further thought. Her freshness, her unspoiled fairness, her simple natural charm, had swept him off his feet as completely as they had bowled over Alwyn. At first he had seemed to see how the land lay between the pair and contented himself with standing aside to watch their delight in each other. But for three days past he had shown a disposition to enter the lists—a disposition which roused in Alwyn rather pity than apprehension. Lolita knew—that was his sure hope—knew what it was to love, to be loved. All Fleming's millions were no offset to the knowledge. Still, it did no harm to make believe he was in fear of them.

Lolita looked at him in silence for a minute, her face the while subtly changing. It smiled still, but with no mirth in the smile, and the dimples and curves somehow shaped themselves to firmer lines. At last she said abruptly: "Don't you see I have to marry him? If I don't, I shall marry you, and that will be your ruin. Don't interrupt. I must say it all at once—I have not promised, but that's how it will end. Last night I had a letter, a home letter. You know we're desperately poor rich folk, which is much worse than being poor outright. Mother has heard how things are. That made her tell me things—things I had never guessed—of debts, privations, humiliations she has endured to make me what I am, something to retrieve our fortunes. Mr. Fleming has written asking her leave to court me. She gave it, of course, in her own dignified, diplomatic way. I am free to choose. If I choose to take him the choice will meet her approval. Oh, I know it all by heart"—

"I know by heart you are not going to do it. You can't," Alwyn broke in, his face gray and lined. Lolita looked away from him, shaking her head. But after a minute she sprang up, saying, with a laugh that was half a sob: "Come, I want one more walk—down past the dovecot. And while we walk we won't talk or think of things."

"Least of all Gordon Fleming," Alwyn said, taking her hand. But somehow it proved easier to say than to do it. By the time they came opposite the dovecot Fleming's name had been many times on their lips.

The dovecot was a detached cottage set thickly about with trees and flowering shrubs and so stoutly hedged passersby got but glimpses of the interior. The house was smothered in vines, and either upon the piazza or in a small sunny lawn space upon clear days there appeared a wheel chair with a helpless man in it and a woman, slight and frail, hovering about him. Today she was invisible, although the chair stood in its usual place. Sight of it, thus desolate, somehow hushed the pair who walked outside. A feeling of something imminent fell upon them. It was hardly a surprise to find the woman herself standing with the gate half open or to have her beckon them inside.

"I heard what you were saying—you two—I could not help it—there in the raspberry thicket," she said abruptly; then, her eyes fast on Lolita's face, "And I had to call you in—because—because I am Gordon Fleming's wife—and I couldn't see you, so young, so fresh, make a bitter mistake."

"His wife!" Alwyn echoed, with staring eyes. "Why, his wife has been at the bottom of the sea this long, long time."

"So he believes; so he must always believe," the woman said hushedly, with a backward glance at the sleeping occupant of the chair. "I should be there if I had gone on that ship, but I didn't sail; I was not strong enough. Listen. I married without love, and I did love somebody else, yet that was not what made the break. I never saw the man I loved until it was all over with my husband. Gordon is a good man, but we did not suit. He is unyielding. If you do not bend to him you must break. And I was impatient and quick spoken and young and unhappy. He could not understand my unhappiness when he had given me so much. He gave me everything but liberty to enjoy it in my own way. If I had not left him I should have killed myself. That might have been better, yet I can't be sorry when I look there."

As she spoke she waved her hand toward the sleeper. "He would have nothing, nobody, if I had died," she murmured, her voice breaking from its tense hardness. "I was going away to escape him. Then at the very last I heard that he had been so hurt he would never walk again. I went to him at once. I have been with him ever since. The ship went down. It seemed the only kindness, the best return I could make Gordon, to let him think I was among the lost. I should never have spoken to any one in any other case. Don't, don't," laying a light and withered hand timidly on Lolita's arm, "let anything make you go against your heart. There are women made to be bartered. You are not of them. Believe me, I am happier here—nurse, drudge, sole stay of a human wreck—than was or would be the mistress of millions with a dead heart in my breast."

Alwyn bared his head. Lolita drew the wasted face to her breast and held it there while her tears rained down upon it. "How can I thank you for saving me?" she whispered at last.

The woman gently loosed herself from the girl's clasp and pointed toward the gate. "Go and forget that you came in and all things save one," she said. "But remember love is enough and only love!"

The Gray Parrot.

The home of the gray parrot, an interesting but sadly ill used creature, is in sunny central Africa, from the Kongo and Guinea coast to the east of Lake Nyassa. Here the "pretty Polies" fly in flocks, as rooks and pigeons do in England, for they are very friendly birds. The birds when caught are huddled together and carried to the coast. Such as are still alive on reaching it are packed, generally without mercy or pity, in the holds of ships or are stowed away in any corner on board where space can be found, to suffer torments from want of air, want of light, want of proper food and space to spread their wings and, worst of all, lack of water, which they dearly love. The wings of many wretched, suffering birds brought to this country are tied so as to prevent them from fluttering and spoiling their beauty. Choking, gasping, stifling from heat or shivering with damp and cold, hundreds upon hundreds die on their way to this country. It has been said by a famous bird fancier that hardly one in a thousand survives the terrible sufferings which gray parrots undergo on their way from their own land to the cage in England.—Our Animal Brothers.

HAPPY WOMEN.

Wouldn't any woman be happy,
After years of backache suffering,
Days of misery, nights of unrest,
The distress of urinary troubles,
To find relief and cure?
No reason why any reader
Should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. Almira A. Jackson, of East Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "For twenty years I was doctoring for kidney and liver trouble, but without benefit. Just before I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was almost paralyzed. I could hardly stand on my feet because of the numbness and lack of circulation. Had a knife been thrust into my kidneys the pain could not have been more intense. My sleep was disturbed by visions of distorted figures. The kidney secretions were annoyingly irregular, and I was tortured with thirst and always bloated. I used seven boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The bloating subsided until I weighed 100 pounds less, could sleep like a child and was relieved of the pain and the irregularity of the kidney action. My circulation is good and I feel better in every way."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Jackson will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price, 50 cents per box.

STUART AND HIS TOUR

Schedule For the First Two Weeks of the Republican Spellbinders.

SHEPP TO DIRECT THE ORATORS

"Uncle Joe" Cannon and Others of National Prominence to Speak in Pennsylvania.

[Special Correspondence.]

Philadelphia, September 18.

Edwin S. Stuart, the Republican nominee for governor, and his colleagues on the Republican state ticket, will start out this week upon their tour of the state, and will make their initial speeches of the trip at Centre Hall, Centre county, on Thursday, September 20, at a farmer's picnic. They are scheduled to go to Bellefonte the same day and address the voters of that borough.

On Friday, September 21, they will address a meeting in the evening at Clearfield, and there will be an afternoon meeting the following day, Saturday, September 22, at Lock Haven, Clinton county, and in the evening they will speak at Williamsport, Lycoming county.

A meeting in the afternoon at Selinsgrove, Snyder county, will open the week, beginning Monday, September 24, and on the evening of the same day the governor-to-be and his colleagues will address a meeting in Shamokin, Northumberland county.

On Tuesday, September 25, they will be in Mahanoy City in the afternoon, and in Pottsville in the evening.

There will be a meeting in Wellsboro, Tioga county, on the evening of Wednesday, September 26, and on Thursday, September 27, the candidates will speak in the afternoon at McSmethport, McKean county, and in the evening at Bradford, McKean county.

Tionesta, Forest county, will be visited on the afternoon of Friday, September 28, and on the evening of the same day the spellbinders will address a meeting in Warren county.

An afternoon meeting in Corry, Erie county, will be held on Saturday, September 29, and on the evening of the same day there will be a grand rally in Erie.

Great Demand For Stuart.

There was a great demand upon Chairman Andrews, of the Republican state committee, for meetings to be addressed by Candidate Stuart, and as far as possible an effort was made to meet every reasonable request for such meetings.

Colonel Andrews has announced the appointment of Colonel Daniel R Shepp, a member of Governor Pennypacker's staff, to be chief of the bureau of speakers for the Republican state committee. Colonel Shepp has many friends throughout the state, and it is predicted that he will enlist many of the best orators of the Republican party in this and other states in the cause of Republicanism in Pennsylvania.

Uncle "Joe" Cannon is among others that Colonel Shepp is confident he will have to speak for the whole Republican ticket in this state this fall.

Colonel Shepp has been in communication with Chairman Sherman, of the Republican National Congressional Committee, and has been advised that a number of national celebrities will be assigned to speak in this state. Republicans realize that the skirmish of the next presidential campaign is now going on.

The loyalty of Republicans everywhere must be appealed to, that they shall not be misled by the cry for fusion candidates, with the declarations that there is no national significance to the canvass in this state this fall. Emery and his supporters are busy with arguments that this is simply a local fight, but when the Garmans, the Guffeys, the Donnellys and the Ryans et al. go over to New York and tell Bryan what they are really doing in Pennsylvania it is time that Republicans all along the line should awaken to the true situation and rally around the banner of Edwin S Stuart, their nominee for governor, and have Pennsylvania give a ringing answer to the Bryan presidential boomers with a tremendous Republican and Roosevelt majority in November.

An Ancient English Workhouse.

In the records of St Thomas hospital, London, is an entry of the year 1579 to the effect that "in consideration of the hote tyme of the yere" the poor be allowed "every one a day three pyntts of Bere for two months," a quart at dinner and a pint at supper, and at the end of two months return to "there olde ordinary allowance, wyche is one quarte." The food at this ancient workhouse was to be dealt with as liberally as the drink The almoner and steward were to "bye no byffe but of the best, without bones and in speciall without the marybon, and none other to be bowght."

McMahon Trial Continues

The trial of Lafayette McMahon for the murder of John Sisto still continues at Uniontown and unless the court asks that the case come to a speedy termination it may last until next week as the defense has a number of witnesses yet to offer. Edward Marks, son of the ferryman of Gray's Landing and Harry Diehl were among McMahon's principal witnesses.

John Cunningham, a young man of that neighborhood, was another witness who testified in behalf of the defendant He saw the shooting and declared that when Sisto fell he had a stone in his uplifted hand about to hurl it at McMahons head. Sisto at that tim ewas standing on the coal shute about eight feet above McMahon, who was on the ground, and probably ten feet away from him.

Letter to F. P. Cook,

Monessen, Pa.

Dear Sir Some people get disappointed in painting, it doesn't come-out as they thought it would.

C. B. Edwards, of Edwards & Broughton, printers, Raleigh, N C., painted his house Devoe three years ago, he has used 30 gallons paste paint before and bought 30 gallons Devoe: Had 16 left Paste paint is extra-thick—with-whitewash.

Mayor W. W. Carroll, Monticello, Florida, says: My painter said it would take 35 gallons to paint my house, it took 20 gallons Devoe. His house is the best paint job in town; and he says Devoe is the whitest white of all white paints.

Jones & Rodgers bought 5 gallons Devoe to prime Mr. Pratt's house at Merkel, Texas. It painted two coats.

The reason for nobody guessing little-enough Devoe is; they learned in a bad school; other paints.
